Crunchy For The Littlest of Heads

Paisley has very curly hair.

I have hair that ranges from straight to wavy to curly depending on where you're looking, and her Daddy- well, her Daddy has hair like this:

I think he gets credit for all her curls. But I- I get credit for that color. Right? Dontcha think?

We knew that her hair had the potential of being a gorgeous challenge. In fact, we welcomed the challenge, hoping only for the craziest head of hair our gene pool could come up with.

What we didn't really think long and hard about was how a toddler would feel about having hair that needed to be combed through 2-3 times a day to prevent tangling. Serious, itty bitty tangles! Every day! It is just no fun combing out tangles on little heads. The opposite of fun for everyone involved. Curls+Dry air+Hard Water+ Taking Naps+ I'm Sure I'm forgetting something=TANGLES.

I don't want her to start having a complex over her hair already. I want her to embrace and love those curls, not dread caring for them!

We've tried a lot of products to figure out what is going to work best. I don't use shampoo on her hair either, but when you're using creams and oils, you need to use something that's going to clean all the residue off. Baby hair is so soft and precious! We cannot be jeopardizing the Baby Hairs. I've tried different natural/organic conditioners, almond oil, fruit oil spray, Kiss My face detangler, etc., etc. The longer her hair gets, the more dissatisfied I was becoming with all of it.

And then I found Original Sprout products- I cannot stop telling people about it.

It is just that amazing.

These are the two we use on her hair-

I wash her hair and scalp with the Deep Conditioner, and I cannot get over how silky it makes her hair. She doesn't even notice when I'm combing through it. When her hair is dry, I wet the ends and work the Curl Calmer through it.

This stuff is amazing. Did I already say that? Well, have a looksee for yourself and I'll shut up already.

I know. To die for.

I couldn't be happier with the quality of this product, and when that happens, I feel like everyone in the world must know. Yeah, it's a little spendier than other products; but when something works, is good for you, and lasts a while, well- I say its worth every penny and will be cheaper in the long run.

Plus, you know. Cindy Crawford puts it in her kid's hair, so there's that. Totally kidding. Well, not about Cindy Crawford using it on her kids, that apparently is true. But what is with all the celebrity endorsements, people? Does the fact that celebrities love it make it more viable?

So what do you use on your little one's hair? And does Cindy Crawford buying stuff make you wanna, too? She is super pretty.
